One of the RRF’s key concerns is that, even after publication of the Rose Report (2006) and the introduction of the Synthetic Phonics based official guidance on the initial teaching of reading (Sept. 2007), student teachers are still not being trained to teach synthetic phonics effectively. Indeed, teacher training organisations have been identified as a major obstacle to the implementation of effective practice. In 2010 Tom Burkard of the Promethean Trust obtained the reading lists of 46 initial teacher training (ITT) courses (these had to be obtained through the Freedom of Information Act) which show an institutional bias towards mixed method and whole language practices. He has very kindly allowed us to publish these on our website.
